The morning air was quiet, and the streets slowly came to life.
A small café opened its doors while the first buses moved through the city.
People hurried to work, carrying coffee, books, and plans for the day.

Later in the afternoon, the sky became cloudy and a light rain began to fall.
Some people stopped beneath the trees, while others continued walking.
The sound of rain made the busy streets feel calmer and more peaceful.

In the evening, the clouds disappeared and the city lights reflected on the wet roads.
Friends met for dinner and talked about their plans for the weekend.
It was an ordinary day, but small moments made it memorable.
